

Anansi Wants Much

Anansi is such a rich chap. Look at that big fat belly!

Anansi
checks all the camps. Such a smell of rich hot lunch!

Anansi wants lunch at all the camps.
Weaver Bird chats to him from a branch.

Anansi has a plan. He chops
up a big rope
in his shed.

Anansi is all set.
The ropes go
from him to all the camps. He grins and sits and sits. Such a plan!

Anansi naps in the sun. He can see such big dishes. Munch, munch, munch!

The dishes are hot. The chaps in all the camps
tug, tug, tug!

Tug, tug, tug!
Anansi spins
up off the land. Such a pinch!

The chaps still tug. The pinch is so bad, and Anansi can't yell much.

The ropes go
slack, and Anansi drops
with a crunch.
He sits up. He has such a thin
waist!

Anansi rushes
from camp to camp, but he gets zilch.
Weaver Bird
looks at him.
Such a thin chap!

Gran checks the kid's dish. "Not so much!" she says. And the spider still has that thin waist.

Anansi Wants Much

Anansi the spider has a big round belly, and he loves it dearly. When the Great Harvest Festival brings seven feasts on the very same day, he ties a rope to each village so he won't miss a single lunch. He naps in the sun, dreaming of munch after munch after munch, but what happens when every chap starts to tug at once? Created to align with the UFLI Foundations scope and sequence (Lesson 48: ch /ch/), this book practices words like 'lunch', 'munch', 'pinch', 'crunch', 'chaps'.
